The thirty-third anni cersary meeting of the Ameri-Anti-Slavery Society was held yesterday in the Church of Puritars. At an early hour the sacred edifice was filled,

The stands of th

make a man and let him be. [1 appause.]

The time will come when that self-evident act of justice shall be secured to all men and women, black as well as white. This was the tendency of things. Congress was not decided on that point, but the question should be agitated, the President and his Cabinet should be denounced, all compromise should be secured, the people should be aummoned to a Congress on the solemu crisis, we should raise higher and higher the banner of our remonstrance over every church-tower, agitate, agitate, natil we shall break down the barriers of oppression the world over. Asour President here to-night has said, the White House is to-day the headquarters of the Rebellion, and the President of the United States is playing for a second term of office. Mr. Sergent proceeded to make some pungcat remarks on the action of Mr. Secretary Seward, which provoked the risibles of the audience, and continued somewhat as follows. We are determined that this thing shall succeed even if we have to die in the straggle. (Applause.) It can no more be stopped than the waters of the sea can be driven back or the rock of ages be shaken. Let us not be discouraged, but go on cheerful and confident that Right and Justice will finally triumph.

The Rev. Mr. Herworth of Boston was the next speaker.

NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBURE, WEINERDAY,

The Fifty-second Anniversary of this Society was celebrated last evening at Irving Hall, the President, Mr. William A. Booth, in the chair. There was a large and by Mr. Francis Williams. After a few preliminary chords the organist commenced the beautiful and familiar air, "The Last Rose of Summer," which he played with great tenderness and feeling. Every note of the sweet tremulo movement in the second part was listened to with great attention, until succeeded by the magnificent combinations with which the voluntary closed

The stadents then song "The Star Spangled Flag of the Pree," in excellent style. The lines "For a hersid of might, and the subban may be as the star Spangled as of the Free," were given with much spirit and loudly applanded ADDRESS OF MAJOR-GEN. HOWARD.

Major-Gen. Howand was then introduced, and enthusiastically cheered. He said: During the war, and after I had recoived a wound, I visited my home in Maine, and, not being able to return to the field, secording to the advice of physicians, for two months, I went through the State talking to the people and canvassing the State for volunteers. I urged on the people and canvassing the State for volunteers. I urged on the people the spirit of self-sacrifice as a Christian duty. We used to be taught some peculiar theories in "Waylands Moral Science," upon the subject of war. I had tried to be a Christian man, I sympathized with Christian men, and I had prayed with Christian men, but when the question was presented to me, before my country and before my God, "Will you retire from the position of active duty?" I felt that it was my Christian duty to do what I could for my country. [Applause.] And it was in this spirit that I urged the people of my State to do what they couldnot only as a patriotic duty, but as a Christian duty. The Governor of the State wanted me to go down to the coast, to a little town called the Secoch town—I will not mention its real name now—to see what I could do there. The quota of the town was quite large, but there had not up to that time been a name now—to see what I could do there. The quota of the town song the same thing, that it was ant only a patriotic duty but a Christian duty that they should make some sacrifice; that it was as much our daily to shed our blood to preserve the Union as it was the duty of our fatners to the duty to the activity that they should make some sacrifice; that it was as much our daily to shed our blood to preserve the Union. The two shed them this, and that the soliders who fought was a should be honored as a w
